DISSERTATIONS DIRECTED

Please note: Italian universities used to offer one degree ("laurea") after four years of courses plus a long dissertation. Until then, a "laurea" degree could be considered the equivalent of a North American MA degree, with thesis. Later, in compliance with the so-called European Bologna process, Italian universities began to offer a three-year programme which only includes a short essay ("laurea"), the equivalent of a Canadian and American BA. This may be followed by another two-year programme with full dissertation ("laurea magistrale"), which is the equivalent of a North American MA with thesis. PhD programmes, similar to the North American ones, are available in most disciplines since 1985.
